MEDICAL INSPECTION IN SCHOOLS

Superintendent Graham Explains How it Would be Carried Out—Requires at Least One Physical Examination Each Year for Every Child—Established Systems Show Epidemics Prevented and Healthier, Happier Children as a Result.

Upon the subject of medical inspection in the schools, which this year is introduced here for the first time, Superintendent Edward J. Graham writes The Bulletin as follows:

Many interested inquiries have been received concerning the introduction of medical inspection into our schools, the nature of the work and how it would be carried out. To take this means of replying to these and many others who are interested in the welfare and progress of our public school children.

Complicates With New Law.
 In order to conform to the new law passed during the last session of the general assembly, the school committee must establish some form of medical inspection. Nearly all of the schools in the state have adopted this form of medical inspection before this law was passed. Norwich did not so now must conform to the law.

The law requires that each child must have during the year at least one physical examination made by a physician or a nurse. The school committee has decided to have the link between medical inspection and examination and the cure for defects found by such examination.

The health department of Boston reports that less than 25 per cent. of parents act on the written notice sent to them by the school committee. So the great work of the nursing corps has been the educating and persuading parents to have their children examined for defects found among school children and carrying into the homes lessons of hygiene.

At Davis Theater.
 Seven Nights to Balldate.

From the time that the curtain went up on the prologue and the audience entered in sympathy with the midwinter scene till the bewildering finale, the play was a masterpiece of the theater. The audience that filled the Davis theater on Friday evening followed with intense interest and delight the two acts of George Cohan's mystery farce, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Not that their pleasure was shown so much in bursts of applause as it was in a continuous stream of "hows" and "whys" that came so fast that it was dangerous to applaud for fear you might miss a thread of the story; but that the audience was so interested in the play that it was evident for everybody went home happy that they had enjoyed this offering by the Davis theater.

With a dash and vigor well suited to the part, Edwin Walter played the lead in the part of the melodramatic writer with a bet to produce a 10,000 word story in 24 hours and the audience finds that the story he writes unfolds right before their eyes as the play progresses. It was a well selected cast throughout with Meta Green playing an effective role as the leading man and one of the other women of the cast contributing noticeably to the enjoyment of the house by the soulful intonations with which she invested her slang and a few "cuss" words.

Crookedness in politics and also in high finance in a big corporation, a reputed hermit who acts the part of a ghost, hard men who do the dirty work for the millionaire, as well as the politician, an adventuresome and the village chief of police, who has a puzzling mystery to unravel, were all wound into the plot that makes the popular play.

The company also gave a matinee, which had an unfortunate experience as it was not started until 4 o'clock. Manager Al Craig explained that the company had been booked to start at 3 o'clock but that it would take four hours to set up, as the scenery was especially heavy and all had had a very busy day. The play started at 4 o'clock.

The night before the play was to reach here Manager Craig had word that they could not get here till 4 o'clock and that tickets for the matinee had been sold. Mr. Davis, lessee of the theater, decided that it would have to go on. The company did not arrive until 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, to do the matinee, but Manager Craig doubled his forces, stage hands and they got the scene together in three hours, which beat the record and were ready to start the play at 4 o'clock.

It was a matter of regret to the Davis theater management that things happened as they did and they were fully refunded the money for tickets to people who were not able to wait for the afternoon performance.

FUNERALS.
 Mrs. William Smiddy.
 At 8:15 o'clock Friday morning the funeral of Nellie J. Harrington, wife of William Smiddy, was held from her home in Monday afternoon, relatives and friends in attendance. The service was held at 9 o'clock Rev. J. F. Quinn conducted a mass of requiem and John's church and two hymns were rendered at the close of the mass by Miss St. Germaine, Robert and Thomas Doyle, M. J. Hickey, William Shelly and Thomas Quinn. Burial took place in St. Patrick's cemetery. There were many beautiful floral tributes.

Undertakers Cummings & Ring had charge of the funeral services.
